Val & Mike watching Joe greeting the Giant Pacific Octopus

What ever happened to Joe?

Joe was rejected by the Giant Pacific Octopus

Looking for the “Beak” of the Giant Pacific Octopus to see if it was smiling after rejecting Joe?

Diane, Ray and Mike checking out the tropical fish from different regions around the world...

Everyone checking out the shark tank to see if they can find the 5 varieties of sharks?

This young lad in the red shirt alerted us to the sharks by yelling, "SHARK...SHARK...SHARK!"
Stephen Spielberg would have been very proud of him! That is how it is done RIGHT!

We finally found some of the sharks...or they found us?

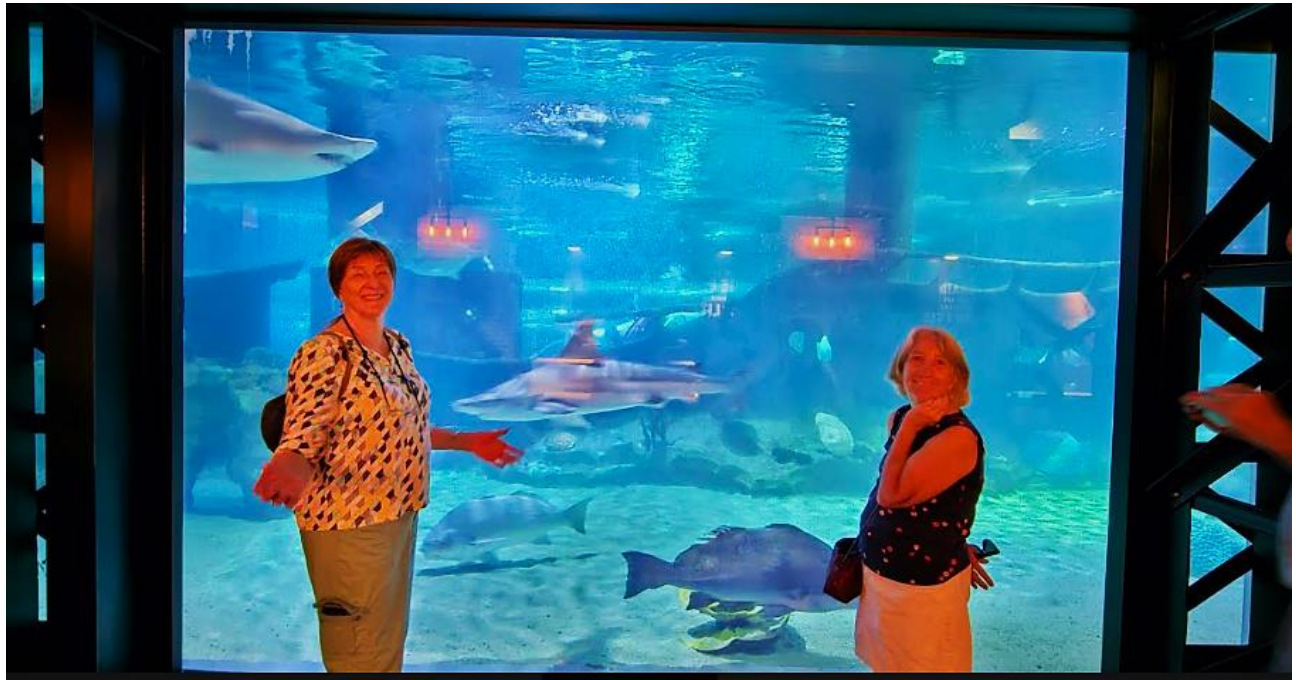

We were thrilled, happy, and very proud!

So were the sharks...

The sharks did not reject Joe's greeting?

Silly old Joe (lunch)?

Some scuba divers were in the water to play with the sharks?

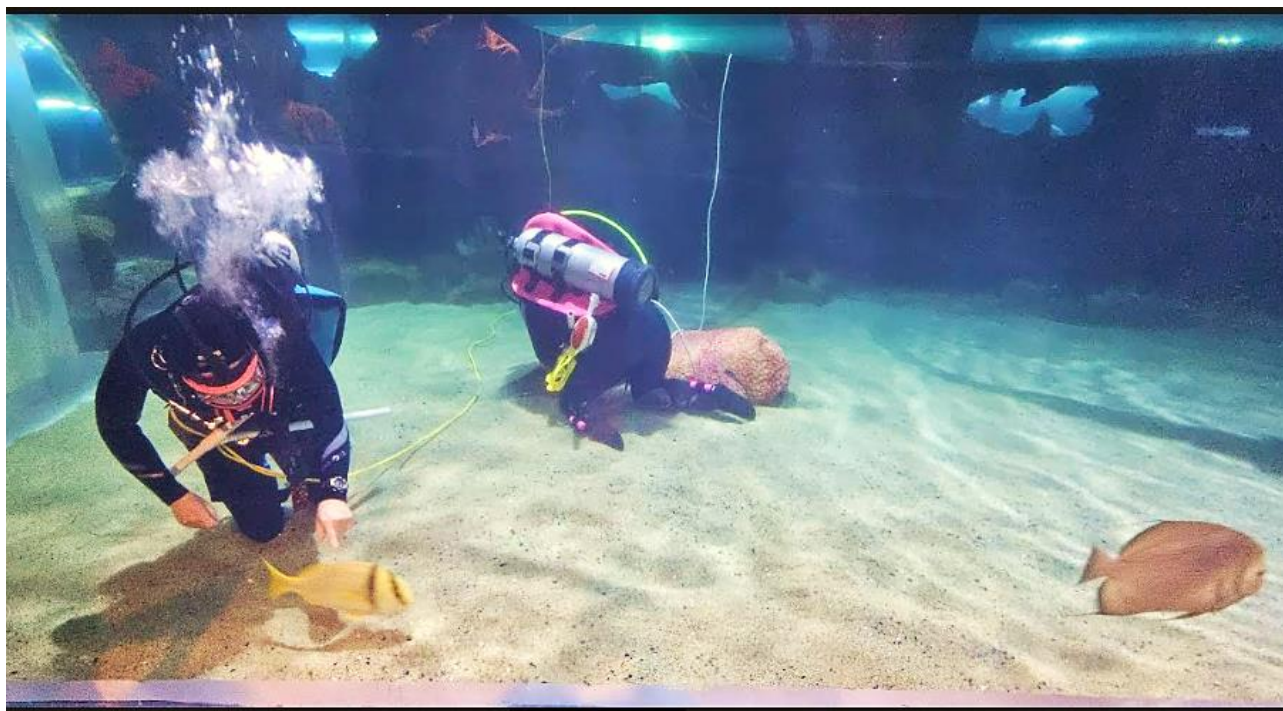

They pointed where we could find the sharks...

But the sharks found us instead and were smiling happily to show us their pearly white teeth!

The sharks swam over, around, but not through us as they would have wished to do...

The two scuba divers were also greeting some of the local fish...

The two scuba divers were finding sharks teeth that had broken off and went into the sand...

The Sharks returned to the two scuba divers to see if they wanted any more sharks' teeth...

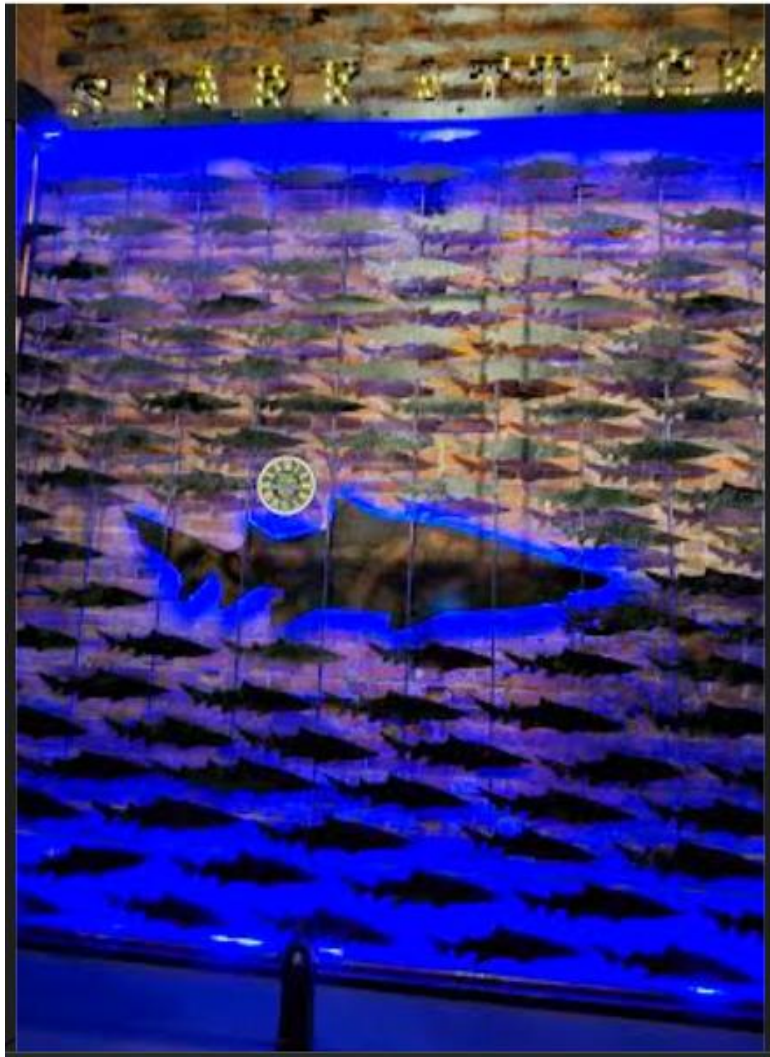

That was when we realized why the two scuba divers were on their knees?

Boy those sharks sure like playing with the scuba divers? They could just tease them all day.

Unfortunately, humans kill 11,073 sharks per hour. About 10X what is shown below:

A great advertisement for Sherwin-Williams paints next to the Greater Cleveland Aquarium!
